Transactions involving valuable business premises were a prominent feature of yeserday's brokerage news. The Mercantile National Bank, which for nearly fifty years has been at the southwest corner of Broadway and Dey street, took a lease of the main loor in the Western Union Building, on the opposite corner. The bank will offer its old property for sale. It was found that the present building had become antiquated. To retain the site the bank would either have to build a low structure for its own exclusive use or erect a tall office building. The directors, however, concluded that the land was too valuable to be improved in the former manner and did not care to charge themselves with the financial and other responsibilities which the construction and management of a skyscraper would demand. The site is one of the most important downtown now on the market. The subway station opened recently at the Dey street corner will in the near future connect with the new Cortlandt street tunnel by a spur from Church street to Broadway.

The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company leased the property at No. 475 Fifth avenue. where it proposes to erect a building in which o house an uptown branch, and the Phenix National Bank, it was learned, is negotiating for a lease of the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall street.
